

Introduction

Attestation and apostille are official processes used to validate educational documents for international use. Attestation involves certifying the authenticity of a degree by authorized government bodies, while an apostille is a globally recognized authentication under the Hague Convention. These verifications help students use their credentials seamlessly across borders for further studies, employment, or migration.

At Dunster Business School, degrees are attested or apostilled only upon a formal request from the student. While we do not independently offer attestation or apostille services, we facilitate the process through authorized channels when a student specifically requires it for international documentation purposes. This ensures that learners who need globally accepted credentials receive reliable and compliant document verification support without it being a mandatory or default service.
